PREFACE TO THE FOURTH EDITION

Ten years have passed since the last edition of ORGAN PLUS was updated and published. This new edition includes many works newly written or discovered since 1981. Leslie P. Spelman originally asked Leonard Raver to complete this fourth edition. Dr. Raver had begun the revision when illness prevented his finishing the project.

Many people need to be thanked for their help on ORGAN PLUS Fourth Edition. Mary Ann Dodd has been extremely helpful in securing additional new works for this revision. I would also like to thank John Stansell and David Winkworth for help in organizing and proofing the material, Jim Detmer of DATASYST Corporation, New Canaan, CT for writing a custom database and helping with layout and design, Clifford Hill of Princeton University Store for locating many foreign addresses and Tony Baglivi and his crew at National Headquarters of AGO for final proofing and printing. Lastly, I wish to thank Leslie Spelman for his invaluable assistance and suggestions along the way.

Several changes have been made in this latest edition. A new section cross-referencing all listed works by composer has been added. Some of the instrument and publisher codes have been revised to aid the user in quickly identifying works that will be useful for a particular situation. Addresses have been included for many of the publishers in the event you wish to contact them directly. Finally, the entire body of ORGAN PLUS is now on a database system that will be updated periodically. Future editions of ORGAN PLUS will be published with ease using this new database.

ORGAN PLUS continues to list only works written (or arranged) for organ with other instruments. This purposely excludes works with voice and/or choir and works written with piano reductions. Other finder's guides for these musical forces are readily available. Future plans for ORGAN PLUS include listing works using handbells, and a new section of original piano/organ works and arrangements. Titles have been retained in their original language to facilitate the ordering of foreign music.

You will notice some deletions in the grading of difficulty, publishers, dates and the like. Some of the scores were not available at press time. These omissions will be added in future editions. Both the Library of Congress in Washington, DC and the New York Public Library [Performing Arts Division at Lincoln Center] have copies of all the works listed in this catalogue regardless of whether they are still in print or not.

Creative use of the catalogue in exchanging "C" instruments will expand the number of works for any given instrument. Works have been listed under their primary instrument, but many pieces will work equally well with alternate instrumentation.

You may write to me c/o American Guild of Organists National Headquarters with questions, comments or suggestions for additional works to include in future editions.

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION

Four years since the Second Edition of ORGAN PLUS brings many new publications of music for organ and instruments. Because of the many requests I have added a section devoted to music for organ and tape. The Addendum is a compilation of Addendum I and Addendum II from the other editions, plus many new numbers. I wish to thank many friends and colleagues in the United States and Europe who have helped in the preparation of all three editions, but especially Fred Tulan for his continued encouragement and assistance, and Terry P. Rothermich of Magnamusic-Baton for his willingness to track down details of many foreign publications. My sincere thanks to Thomas Brown for his meticulous accomplishment of preparing the Addendum, and for rearranging the entire ORGAN PLUS.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

The rapid sale of the First Edition of ORGAN PLUS, making necessary a second printing, is evidence that such a catalogue is needed. The Second Edition contains additional numbers in the Addenda that have recently been published and a few that were omitted in the First Edition. I am especially grateful to Bradley Hull for his meticulous editing of both the first and second editions of ORGAN PLUS.

PREFACE TO ORIGINAL EDITION

The organ has had a noble history as a liturgical instrument, as a solo instrument, and as an ensemble instrument. Today it is again finding its important function as an ensemble instrument. Performers are searching for ensemble literature with organ, and composers are responding with many new and important works. Both the past and the present have much to offer.

The organ was used extensively in small instrumental ensembles in the Renaissance and the Baroque periods. The early trio sonatas were scored for three melody instruments, two treble and one bass, plus either the harpsichord or the organ to fill in the harmony. Here the keyboard performer did not have a definite part written out, but the performer played from the bass line, usually figured. No preference was indicated for organ or harpsichord, but the availability of either instrument usually decided which was to be used. A small organ with no pedals was quite adequate.

In the Classical period we find some clavier concertos which were designed for either instrument. As the basso continuo system was given up, the organ was less used in instrumental ensembles. In the seventeen church sonatas by Mozart we can trace the change: the first few use the organ as little more than a basso continuo instrument, numbers nine and ten have a separate organ part written out, and number fifteen is really a concerted allegro movement for organ and strings with an elaborate, florid organ score with a cadenza.

The Romantic period contributed little of real worth in this form. Some concertos for organ and orchestra were written by Rheinberger, Guilmant, and others, but in the main composers of this period avoided the organ as an ensemble instrument. In the late nineteenth century and the twentieth century composers have again turned to this genre, making available a vast literature appropriate for concert and church service.

This catalogue of available works for organ and instrumental ensemble is the result of a lifetime interest. In 1930-32, when I was organist-choirmaster of the American Church of Paris, I found that musicians from the Paris symphony orchestras were happy to play at church services and recitals for very modest fees. This led me to search in the music stores and libraries for compositions that had a more interesting organ part than the figured bass realization in the sonatas and duets that the symphony men suggested. Here began my personal library of ensemble music. My next post found me in an eastern college where on the faculty we had two violinists, a cellist, a clarinetist, and a flutist. Fortunately for me, none of the three piano teachers were interested in chamber music and these instrumentalists were happy to perform with the organ if we could find suitable music.

During my thirty-one years at the University of Redlands, I came to realize that there is a unique educational value for the student organist in instrumental ensemble music that is quite different from accompanying a singer or choir. I purchased everything that I could locate in catalogues and in the church and recital programs of other organists. On several trips to Europe I continued to add to the library. When I decided to prepare a catalogue of such works, most of the publishers in the United States and abroad were most generous in sending me their recent publications. This is the story of the growth of the library from 1930 to the present.

In the performance of instrumental ensembles with organ, two matters need special care; registration and ensemble. In registration of the early trio sonatas in which the organ plays the basso continuo part, care must be taken not to overpower the ensemble. Here is needed a clear tone quality of 8' stops with a judicious use of 4' and/or possibly a soft 2'. Keep in mind the transparent harpsichord sound.

If the bass line is doubled with another instrument such as the cello or bassoon, all the organ parts should be played on the same manual. If only the upper melody instruments are used in performance, the left hand should play the basso continuo melody on a separate manual with a stronger tone quality to properly bring out this important melodic line. It is not appropriate to do this with the pedal, but perhaps the pedal could be used occasionally at important cadences, limited to a soft 16' and 8', most certainly avoiding any heavy booming pedal tone.

Since the modern editions of these sonatas have the basso continuo realized by the editors, it is possible and often advantageous to depart from the printed notation and make your own realization. Fortunate indeed is the organist who has had good training in figured bass playing along with written harmony study! In addition to achieving a better grasp of traditional harmonic practice, playing from a figured bass is also functional in realizing figured bass of early ensemble music such as the recitatives in Bach cantatas and similar works.

Many of the early trio sonatas consist of a series of short movements, each in Baroque binary form, with each section of the two-part movement repeated. Ideally the repeat should be different from the first statement, hopefully with some embellishment of the melodic lines. Here the organist should be ready to make suggestions or have written-out embellishments, as too few instrumentalists are familiar with the extemporaneous nature of the Baroque style. In addition to rhythmic and melodic changes in the melodic line, a subtle change in organ registration is often appropriate.

More recent composers have usually indicated organ registrations which often should be considered as suggestions, not rigid requirements. In compositions for brass and organ, a stunning antiphonal effect can be obtained with a large organ by restricting the organ tone to the principal chorus plus mutations, without reeds. However in an organ of modest size and volume, organ reeds may need to be added in forte passages to balance the brilliant timbre of the brass.

Achieving good ensemble and balance often presents some special problems. With a small organ so situated that the organist and instrumentalists can each hear the total sound, good ensemble playing is easy. In playing a large organ with the console some distance from the pipes, good results are more difficult to obtain. Here the instrumentalists often cannot properly hear the organ, and, depending on their position, the organist often cannot properly hear the total effect. If the players are near the console, the organist is inclined to play too loudly as he hears mainly the instrumentalists.

One solution is to have someone of taste and frankness listen critically and advise. A method that is even better is having a deputy organist play the organ and the organist listen to the ensemble, carefully writing down all the details of registration, including the position of the swell boxes. It is worthwhile to rehearse your instrumentalists with the piano on the initial run-through.

This catalogue has certain self-imposed limitations. A complete listing of concertos for organ and symphony orchestra is not included. Richard Satorius has admirably done this in Concertos for Organ and Orchestra published by the Instrumentalist Company (1961), although this is now fourteen years old. I have therefore duplicated a few of his listings for organ and chamber orchestra. No listings are given for piano and organ, for tape and organ, for handbells and organ, or for voices or chorus and organ. Included are a few compositions for organ, instruments, and chorus that are effective without the chorus. The listing of early trio sonatas contains only a limited number of those most easily available. Musicians interested in this field should consult such catalogues as Bärenreiter, Breitkopf and Härtel, Henle, Hug, Musica Rara, Peters, etc. Those interested in further serious study of such literature should consult large collections of early music such as Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst, Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich, etc., and may be inspired to create their own realizations of the figured bass.

Compositions are listed only once in this catalogue, but a substitution of instruments is often quite possible and effective. Some composers have anticipated this by listing the work for organ and solo instrument (see Miscellaneous Combinations). Frequently the composer has indicated a choice as violin or viola, flute or oboe, etc. The performers should feel free to make their own substitution of instruments.

With the present trend to introduce more variety in the music used for church services, orchestral instruments are finding an increased use in both services and organ recitals. Many compositions with piano accompaniments can be adapted to the organ, but there is a growing literature of ensemble music written specifically for the organ. This catalogue presents compositions for organ and a limited number of orchestral instruments or at the most a chamber orchestra. May it be of help to those who are seeking to add to their repertoire of ensemble music.

In the preparation of this catalogue thanks are due to the generosity of the many publishers who have supplied me with the music for review. Special appreciation must be expressed to the following whose continued interest and cooperation have given me needed detailed information: Robert Jacobs of Associated Music Publishers, H. Willard Gray of H. W. Gray Division of Belwin-Mills Publishing Company, Dorothy Richter-kessing of Concordia Publishing House, the staff of Donemus in Amsterdam, Almarie Dieckow of Magnus-Baton, Norman Auerbach of Theodore Presser, and Rita Kreutzer of World Library Publications.

Particular thanks are due to Wilma Jensen for sharing her knowledge, to Mike Warren of Alphonse Leduc of Paris for his research on foreign publications, and to William Lichtenwanger of the Library of Congress. I am grateful to Fred Tulan for his careful reading of the manuscript and helpful suggestions, to Harold Gleason for his valuable advice, to the national officers of the American Guild of Organists for encouragement to continue the project, to Mary Petersen for typing part of the manuscript, and lastly to Alma for her constant support amid the clutter of piles of music on chairs and tables for so many years.

To my students who have taught me most of what I know.
